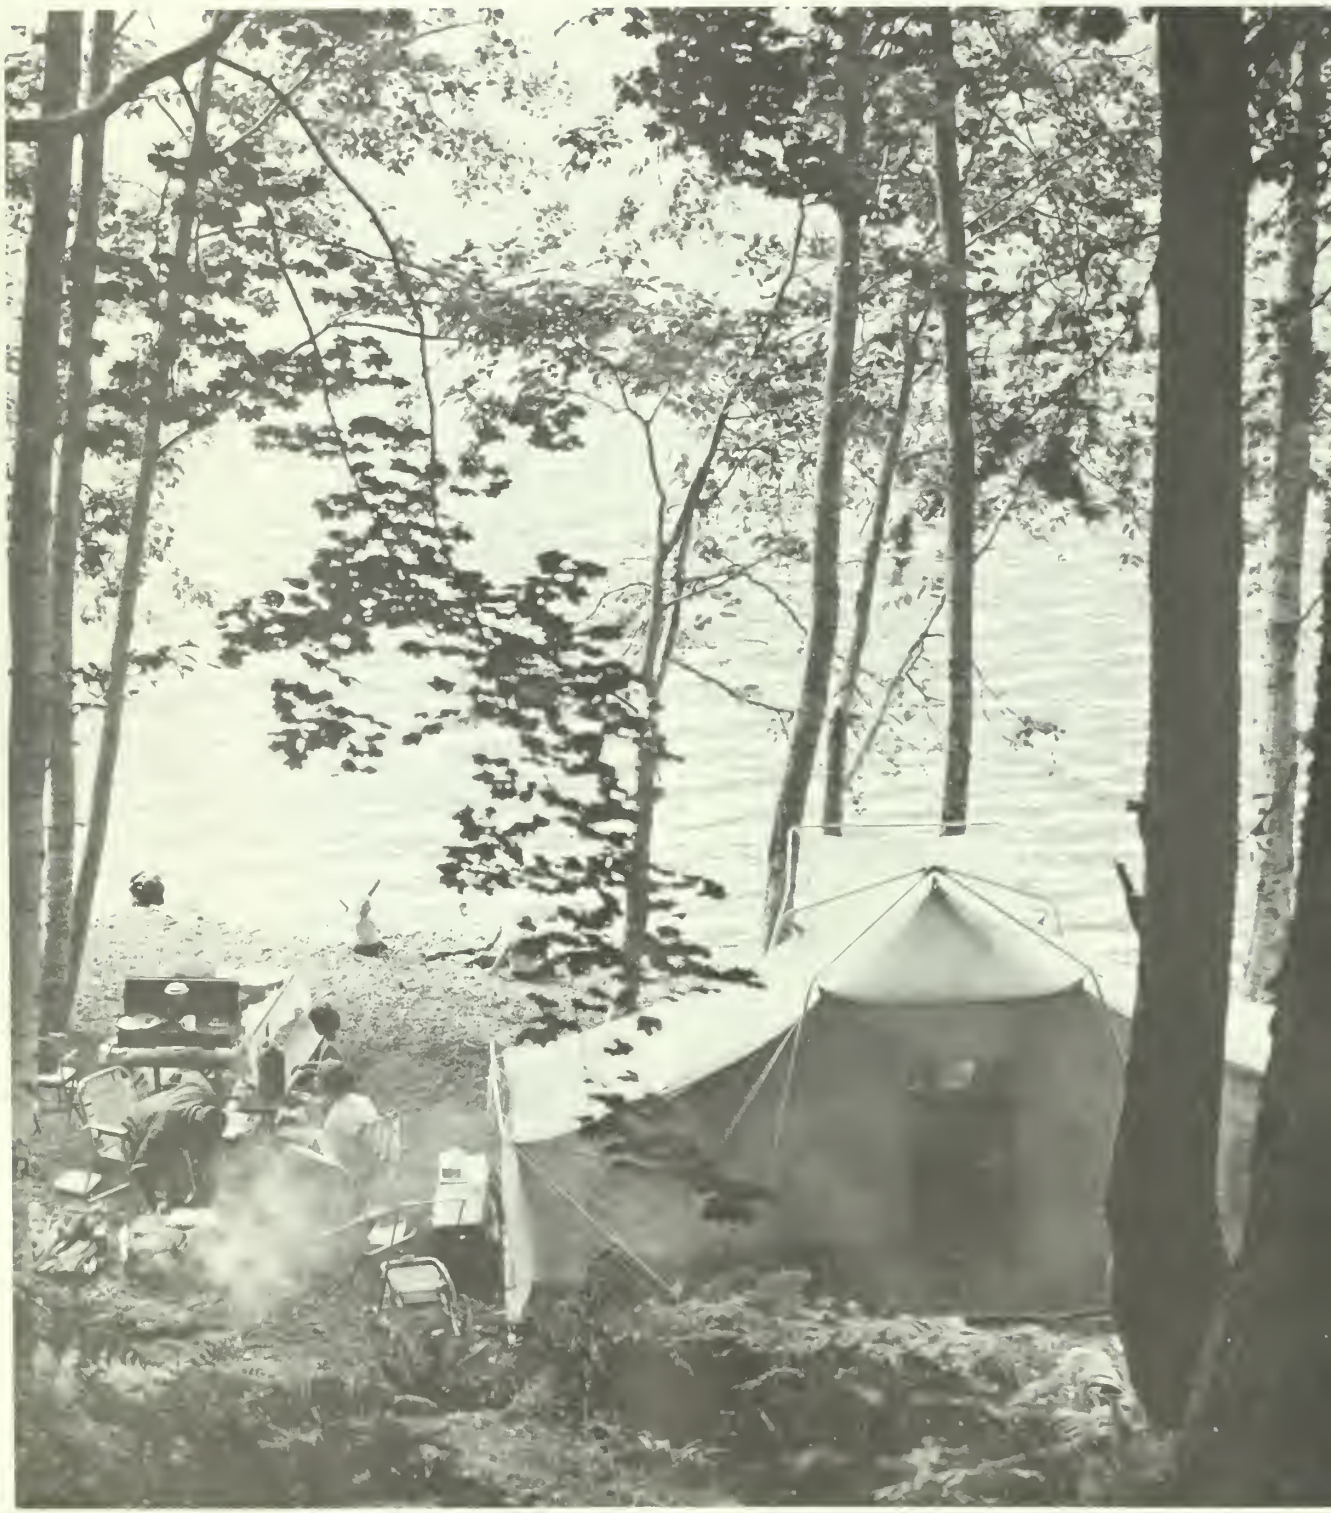
camping

in the national park system



One hundred four areas of the National Park System provide camping facilities for people who wish to use them as a base for the enjoyment of the surrounding park area. Limited camping facilities are also provided in some backcountry areas to accommodate visits by canoeists, hikers, horseback riders, and other outdoor enthusiasts.

This booklet contains basic information about the facilities and recreational opportunities available to users of National Park System camping areas.

Advance Information
Information on the entire range of facilities, activities, and points of interest at each park is available from park superintendents at addresses listed in the tables.

Alaska Parks
There are several new but as yet undeveloped park areas in Alaska. All provide free wilderness camping, but access to these areas is difficult. Places to purchase supplies are limited in number. For further information write to: Alaska Regional Office, National Park Service, 540 W. Fifth Avenue, Room 202, Anchorage, Alaska 99501.

Fees in the National Parks
Both entrance fees and recreation use fees are authorized at many park areas. Single-visit entrance fees range from $1 to $3 per private passenger vehicle. Entrance fees are not charged visitors under age 16.

An annual entrance permit—the Golden Eagle Passport—is issued for $10 at all parks where entrance fees are charged. In addition, a lifetime entrance permit—the Golden Age Passport—is issued free to any U.S. citizen or permanent resident age 62 or older upon presentation of any reasonable proof of age at any park where entrance or recreation use fees are charged. Also, a free Golden Access Passport is issued at such parks to blind or disabled persons. To get such a passport, you must present a document showing eligibility for disability benefits under one of several federal programs; for example, Federal Retirement or Veterans Disability, or disability under Railroad Retirement or Social Security. All three passports provide for free entry to all areas of the National Park System for the permit holder and those accompanying the holder in a private, noncommercial vehicle. The passports will also admit the holder and any members of the holder's family, regardless of their mode of entry into the park.

Campsite users are charged recreation use fees at all campgrounds that have certain minimum facilities and services. These fees are generally set at rates comparable to similar private campgrounds in the vicinity and range from $3 to $8 per night per campsite. They are charged in addition to any park entrance fee, and the Golden Eagle Passport does not apply to them or to any other recreation use fee. However, the Golden Age and Golden Access Passports provide a 50% reduction of such fees to the holder. The accompanying tables indicate the campgrounds at which a camping fee is charged.

Fees for group campsites may vary with size of group, but most have a minimum charge of up to $10.

Fees for concession-operated facilities, including trailer village sites and the campgrounds at John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Memorial Parkway and Virgin Islands National Park, are charged by the concessioners and are not Federal recreation use fees. Concessioner fees are not affected by either the Golden Eagle, Golden Access, or Golden Age Passports.

In addition to camping fees, recreation use fees may be charged for guide service or elevators and similar services or facilities. Fee schedules are posted in individual parks and are subject to change.

Reservations
Most individual campsites are available on a first-come, first-served basis and cannot be reserved. However, reservations can be obtained for campsites at the boat-access campgrounds at Dinosaur National Monument; certain campgrounds at Ozark National Scenic Riverways; Acadia and Grand Canyon National Parks; and all campgrounds at Cumberland Island and Point Reyes National Seashores by writing to the appropriate park superintendent. Virgin Islands National Park campsites may be reserved by mail through the park concessioner, Cinnamon Bay Campgrounds, P.O. Box 120, St. John, V. I. 00830. Some campsites at Cape Hatteras National Seashore, and at Grand Canyon, Great Smoky Mountains, Rocky Mountain, Sequoia, Shenandoah, and Yosemite National Parks may be reserved upon payment of a small fee.

Many areas of the National Park System require reservations for use of group campsites and hike-in campsites in the backcountry.

Length of Stay
The steadily increasing demand for campsites has made it necessary to limit the number of days a person may occupy a site at some parks during peak seasons. Time limits indicated in the accompanying tables are subject to change.

Recreation Vehicles
Trailer village sites are offered on a fee basis by many park concessioners. Some may be reserved. Utility connections are located only in these sites.

Self-contained recreation vehicles—those requiring no utility connections—can be accommodated at most National Park System campgrounds, but size restrictions are imposed at some campgrounds. Sanitary (dumping) stations are available in some parks for disposal of liquid wastes from recreation vehicle holding tanks.

Backcountry Camping
Primitive camping is permitted in many of the remote, roadless areas of the National Park System. Hikers, mountain climbers, horseback riders, boaters, and canoeists are encouraged to take advantage of camping opportunities in distant reaches of the parks.

Tips on backcountry camping: At least one member of your party should be an experienced outdoorsman; inform the park superintendent or ranger of your route, destination, and time schedule; offer your equipment for ranger inspection and advice. Experienced park personnel can help make your trip more enjoyable by assisting in planning travel routes and advising on possible hazards and unusual features.

Occasionally, backcountry use is prohibited because of emergency conditions—such as high fire danger or severe weather conditions.

Many parks offering backcountry camping opportunities require camping and/or fire permits, which may be obtained at park headquarters.

Backcountry use has been restricted in many areas of the National Park System. This program, which requires free permits for backcountry use and limits the number of people permitted in the backcountry at one time, has proven successful in protecting these fragile areas and alleviating the crowding that backcountry users seek to avoid. For information about specific backcountry restrictions, contact the appropriate park.

Accessibility for Wheelchair Users
Many parks have campgrounds that will meet the needs of visitors in wheelchairs. Although national park campgrounds are often on uneven or rough ground, with varying soil conditions, the campgrounds listed in this directory with facilities for handicapped persons have, to the best of our knowledge, tent sites on reasonably level ground with no major barriers to the movement of a wheelchair. They are located within 300 feet of a restroom over a reasonably smooth path of moderate or no slope. Restrooms, the critical element, have been divided into two categories: accessible and usable. Accessible restrooms have at-grade entrances and toilet stalls with 30" wide doors and grab bars. They are marked by an "A" in the handicap access column. Usable restrooms lack something, often grab bars, or their doors are narrower or perhaps there is a step into the building. However, a wheelchair can get over to the toilet. These are designated by "U" in the table. Please realize that many, but not all, disabled visitors will be able to use a usable restroom unaided.

For detailed information on accessible and usable campsites in the National Park System, write to the Office of Public Inquiries, National Park Service, Washington, D.C. 20240. Disabled visitors who have questions about their ability to use a particular campground should write to that park for more information.

Fires

The National Park Service is sympathetic with the love of campers for campfires. But fire danger, wood shortage, or air pollution (from too many campfires in one area) may make it necessary for a park to place a temporary or permanent ban on open fires. Campers are encouraged to use liquid-fuel campstoves or charcoal for cooking. The gathering of wood for campfires is always limited to dead material found on the ground; sometimes it is prohibited. Firewood may be purchased in some campgrounds.

Outdoor programs

In many parks, interpretive programs, including nature walks, guided tours, and campfire talks, are conducted by park personnel. Other activities which campers may enjoy, such as swimming, boating, and fishing, are indicated in the campground listings on the following pages.

Regulations

For protection of natural or historic features and for your comfort and safety, regulations are enforced.

Natural features. Every area of the National Park System is a museum of natural or human history; removal or destruction of any feature is not allowed. This also applies to man-made facilities.

Wildlife. Do not feed wild animals. Injuries to campers by bears or other animals are usually due to the camper's attempts to feed them. Observe the animals, but do not interfere with them. Food supplies should be locked up or hung out of reach; such measures are required at some parks.

Hunting is prohibited in national parks, monuments, and historical areas of the National Park System. The use of campgrounds in these areas as base camps for hunting outside park boundaries also is prohibited. Hunting is authorized, in accordance with State laws, in national recreation areas, national seashores, and other recreational areas of the System.

Fire. Confine your fire to fireplaces in established campgrounds and picnic areas. Before you retire for the night or leave your campsite unattended for any reason, make certain that your campfire is entirely out. Where required, backcountry campers must obtain a fire permit.

Trash. Keep your camp clean by placing all garbage and trash in containers provided. All combustible material should be burned in the fireplaces. In wilderness camps, incombustible trash—including cans—must be carried out or disposed of as directed.

Pets are allowed in the parks and campgrounds if they are kept on a leash or under other physical restraint at all times. They are generally prohibited in backcountry areas. Pet owners are asked to be especially careful to prevent disturbance of others enjoying the park.

Noise. Common courtesy is the rule. Be especially careful not to be noisy late at night and early in the morning.

Keep It Safe

The National Park System is intended for your enjoyment, whether you are coming to view the wonders of nature, to tread in the footsteps of history, or simply to get out and have some fun. But first take a minute to read these simple but very important safety rules, and then go on to a pleasant and safe time in the park.

- Know the area. Ask the park rangers for brochures, maps, and advice about park attractions and hazards.
- Observe park regulations. They are for your enjoyment and protection. Snowmobiles, all-terrain vehicles, fires, fishing, swimming, and other activities are governed by regulations which take into account local conditions and problems.
- Watch your children. Your knowledge, experience, and wisdom can't help a child who is beyond your protective reach.
- Keep your distance from wild animals. Don't feed bears or other wildlife. Remember that all wildlife can be dangerous. Remember, too, that young animals are seldom abandoned—a very protective parent is probably nearby.
- Dress properly. Even in the heat of summer it is often cool in the mountains or caves. If you are hiking on rough terrain, be sure to wear sturdy shoes or boots.
- Drive carefully. Park roads are not expressways, so take it easy and enjoy the view from overlooks and parking areas. Be alert for less considerate drivers who may stop without warning to see wildlife or scenery. Unusual hazards—rock slides, flash floods, unseasonal snow and ice, animals and visitors crossing roads at unexpected places—are all possible at some time, some place in park areas.
- Notify park headquarters of your plans to explore. Mountain climbing, hiking, or horseback riding in remote areas; exploring caves or lake bottoms; and numerous other enterprises can be dangerous even for experts. If they know your plans, park rangers can alert you to hazards, watch for your return, and, if necessary, organize rescue efforts. Telling them your plans could save your life.
- Don't try it alone. Two heads are safer than one. Whether it's a short hike in the woods or a month-long mountain climb, a companion may save your life.
- Know your own limits. Strenuous exertion in extremes of temperature or altitude can be dangerous if you are unaccustomed to sustained exercise.
- Report trouble. Whether it is your own or someone else's problem, a park ranger can help only if he knows help is needed.
- Leave things as you found them. The ideal visitor "takes nothing but memories, leaves nothing but footprints." You may want only a stick or a pebble. You may drop only a cigarette butt or a tissue. But if each one of a million visitors does the same, a shining beach or a sylvan glade will soon become a desolate trash heap.

Camping and Wildlife

You may camp in many park areas and never meet anything more wild than a chipmunk. On the other hand, you may see wildlife ranging from the prairie dog to the grizzly bear. And, more often than not, you won't have to wander too far from your campsite to see wild animals. Wherever you camp and wherever you roam in the parks, remember that you—not the animals—are the intruder. Respect them with common sense and caution, and you will have some wonderful wildlife watching.

Bears

Although national park campgrounds are planned with certain safety factors in mind, there are no fences to separate you from wildlife. Some animals will root through garbage cans and your picnic leavings, but others will approach boldly for a handout. Do not be deceived—tameness is an illusion. All park animals are wild, the "friendly" looking black bear included.

Because of their protected status within parks many bears lose their fear of man and acquire a taste for his food. Instinctively a hunter, the bear may become aggressive when teased with tidbits from a car window or a picnic table. If the supply of goodies runs out it may try to seize more by force. The result—a badly clawed arm, or worse. For your protection, park regulations prohibit the feeding or molesting of bears.

If you camp away from designated campsites, here are a few things to remember to keep the bears away:

- Do not throw aside or bury garbage and food containers.
- Combustible trash should be burned. Burn tin cans and other non-combustible trash, except glass, to destroy food odors. Then remove cans from the cold ashes, flatten them, and take them to trash receptacles at the trailhead.
- Store foodstuffs (preferably in air-tight containers) out of reach of bears. Food can be suspended by ropes between trees.
- If previous campers have left a dirty camp, clean up the mess for your own protection.
- Use dry, prepackaged foods and avoid greasy, odorous foods such as bacon and ham.

■ Packs and sleeping bags should be kept clean and free of food odors. As a precaution against the presence of these odors, sleep some distance from your campfire and cooking area.

Other Wild Animals
The bear is not the only wild animal that has become a beggar. Deer and coyote, especially, have become bold enough to approach people along park roads and campsites. As with bears, caution should be used. The split hooves of deer and elk are sharp and can inflict deep wounds, as can the buck's antlers. Remember, the females of some species, notably bears and moose, are very protective of their offspring and may react savagely when approached by a human.

Diseases Carried by Animals
Any species of warm-blooded mammal may carry rabies, bubonic plague, or other communicable diseases. For this reason park animals, large or small, should never be handled or fed by visitors. The most common injury to park visitors from wild animals is a bite from a chipmunk, a squirrel, or other rodent that is being fed at the roadside or campsite. A bite from a rabid chipmunk can be as dangerous as one from a rabid dog.

The prairie dog is common in some parks of the Great Plains and the West. Do not feed them, no matter how friendly they look. For an offer of candy and salted peanuts, you may get a painful nip from sharp teeth. Furthermore, you should not let them get close to you, for they carry fleas that can transmit disease to humans.

Definitions of Campground Types
Type A—Campground. A campground area is classified as having well-defined roads, parking spaces, and campsites. Drinking water and sanitary facilities, including flush toilets and refuse cans, are furnished on a community basis. Each campground has a designed capacity based on the number of campsites therein.

A campground site, or campsite, is a clearly marked plot or location within a campground which provides accommodations for camping by an individual, family, or party. A typical campsite in a campground would include parking space, fireplace, table and bench combination, and tent space; in a walk-in campground or walk-in section of a campground, the parking space is provided but not as an integral part of each campsite.

Type B—Camping Area. A camping area is an area (other than a campground) designated and regularly used for camping by individuals, families, or parties, Camping areas may be accessible by either road or trail. Facilities provided are minimal, generally being limited to access roads, basic sanitary facilities, and a limited number of fireplaces and tables. Trail camps fall within this category, and shelters of the Adirondack or fully enclosed type may be provided. Each camping area has an assigned, as differentiated from designed, capacity based on the number of camping spaces therein. Superintendents assign to each camping area a capacity figure, in terms of camping spaces, based on a realistic evaluation of acreage involved, topography, facilities provided, and average camping party size.

A camping space in a camping area is one which is normally occupied by an individual, family, or party.

Type C—Group Camp. A group camp is an area designated for use by organized groups, such as Boy Scouts, school groups, or other large parties. It is composed of one or more group spaces, each of which is provided with a large fireplace, several tables, and parking space for buses or a number of cars. Capacity of group camps is rated on the basis of the number of group spaces within the camp and the number of persons each can normally accommodate.

Nearby Public Campgrounds
Some parks in the National Park System do not have camping facilities but are located close to publicly operated campgrounds. These parks are listed below. The name of the nearby park is shown in parentheses, following the name and address of the National Park Service area. For information about these facilities, write to the NPS superintendent.
